

Hezekiah celebrates the Passover.

2 Chronicles 29—30

Hezekiah was now the king of Judah. His father had disobeyed God all of his life and worshiped false gods from other countries.

But Hezekiah did not want to be like his father. As soon as he became king, he talked to all the men whose families had served in the Temple and told them to get ready to serve God again. They opened the doors of the Temple and cleaned it, so everyone could come to worship God.

Hezekiah sent letters and messengers throughout Judah and Israel. He invited everyone to come to Jerusalem to celebrate Passover. Passover is a holiday God's people celebrate to remember how God had helped the Israelites escape from slavery in Egypt. People were excited as they heard the news that they could worship God again in the Temple.

On the day Passover began, there was a large crowd of people in Jerusalem. For the first time in a long time, people from Israel and Judah worshiped God together. Everyone was so glad to celebrate God's goodness that they kept celebrating for another whole week!
