

The believers in Corinth help others.

2 Corinthians 8—9

Many of Jesus' followers lived in Jerusalem. But some of them were very poor. They needed money to buy food and clothes. So Paul wrote a letter to Jesus' followers in the city of Corinth. "Save some money every week for the Christians in Jerusalem," Paul wrote. "They need your help."

The Christians in Corinth could have said, "Why should we help those people? They live so far away. God can take care of them!" But they didn't. Each week they collected money to send to Jerusalem.

Later, Paul sent another letter to Corinth: "I'm coming to get the money you have. I'll take it with me to Jerusalem." And that's just what Paul did!

The people in Corinth were glad they could give their money to help others. And the people in Jerusalem were thankful the people in Corinth had cared for them.
